Read the passage and answer questions 23-30.

1. Most people go to school in their childhood, it is the basic education. But there are children who don't go to school, but get their education at home with the help of a tutor (private teacher). It's called distant learning. It may be because of their health problems or for some other reasons. There are advantages of such learning – they have as much free time as they need to understand the material.

2. But going to school is not only studying, it's also communication with other people, it's finding your place in the society, getting friends, learning how to behave in public. So a child should go to school if it is possible.

3. Distant education also has another meaning. When you go to university or want to start some advanced courses, there is an opportunity to have distant learning. The advantage of such learning is that you can study in another country without leaving yours. It gives you more freedom – you don't have to attend lessons, you can combine studying and working. Distant learning gives you a chance to have a certificate in any field that you like and choose education you want.

23. The passage is mainly about
